Redefining Failure

Athletes train for countless days, weeks, and months for an opportunity to prove they are the best in their sport. Every four years, a few contend for 17 days at the Olympics for a coveted gold medal -- the right to be called the best in the world. Few attain this goal, while many others do not. Is failure to achieve the ultimate goal a complete and all-encompassing failure? Click here for more

Total Force Integration within the 301st Fighter Wing

The 457th Detachment, 495th Fighter Group, NAS Fort Worth JRB, said goodbye to its first commander June 6, 2014. Lt. Col. Matthew J. "Meat" Cliver retired after directly supporting the Total Force Integration initiative established a few years ago. Read more

AF to every Airman: Tell us your story

Air Force leaders want Airmen to share their stories with the world and designed the 2014 American Airman Video Contest with that purpose in mind. The contest, which begins July 1, asks Airmen to shoot a selfie video where they share individual stories of service and showcase the unique missions they do every day. Read more

For the fallen and their families

All Air Force careers start with the same solemn promise, but there is no way to tell how they will end. When Airmen take the oath of enlistment, they are aware others who have made the same promise, sacrificed their lives in service to their country. When an Airman falls, there is a team of people working to honor them long before the American flag is handed to family members and the quiet words are given in appreciation on behalf of the president and the nation.
